The Market has spent the past few weeks trying to stabilize and find some footing as we have been in a down trend after making some extreme all-time highs in early October. We watched the CME feeder futures market that was severely over bought moving from the sub three dollar range in early July to the sub four dollar range in early October. This was a bull move like we have never seen that I can ever remember in history. Just as we were all scratching our heads as to why we had moved so much higher in that short time, and although everyone was excited and enjoying the record prices we did wonder if it would last. It was about then our trusty government decided that beef was too high and needed to be cheaper, a few tweets and just some discussion of policy changes sent The CME funny money running for the exit door and down came the market. As we watched multiple days of limit down in both live cattle and feeder cattle futures, one begins to wonder when enough was enough. The good news is, as of now the Cash market has not followed suit, although of course it is cheaper it has not lost near what the futures market has. For example, we are looking at a Cash feeder cattle index of 340 and a January feeder contract of around 320. It is nice that there is still enough optimism out there in the country to keep the cash market at such a big premium to the Futures, but this does bring the question and uneasiness as to where we are going from here. It does seem as though we do have some headwinds ahead of us in the short term and could possibly trade lower in the coming weeks. That said the positive long-term fundamentals do still exist and as we get to the new year and look towards our spring rally time, there should be a significant up trend through the first and second quarter of 2026.

As for the Cash market here at Visalia Livestock we have seen a lower trending market each week, although not nearly as rapidly as the future's market. Light grass weight cattle are still bringing a premium in comparison to the rest of the market. Feeder cattle in somewhat of a light test the past few weeks also selling lower off a solid $25 from the highs. Butcher cows and bulls called lower also but not as much only selling $10-$15 lower on the top end.

If you need any last-minute breeding Bulls Wednesday, December 3, we will have 35 top end Angus Bulls from Kern Cattle Company all semen and trick tested ready to go with high end EPD's, 20 to 22 months of age. There will be a calf feeder special with a significant offering of quality cattle following the bulls.

.....See you at Ringside. Randy
